June 2016

Welcome to the SwiftStack Monthly Newsletter!

Hi {{lead.First Name:default=Colleague}},

With summer in full swing and many sitting poolside working on their tans, the team at SwiftStack is cranking away rolling out the final components of SwiftStack 4.0 and developing really cool stuff that will be available later in the year. This newsletter has plenty of new things to share, so scroll down to check it out. And soon, we'll be launching a new website to better provide you the latest info on SwiftStack. Keep an eye out for it and let us know what you think!

Respectfully,

Mario Blandini
Chief Evangelist

PRODUCT UPDATE

SwiftStack Drive

We continue to roll out additional SwiftStack 4.0 functionality...this time, SwiftStack Drive is now available. Learn all about how to access SwiftStack from Windows or OS X desktops in the same manner you access other local or network-attached storage.

Integrated Load Balancer

This week, the new and enhanced integrated load balancer will also become available in SwiftStack. This functionality will greatly reduce the need for an external load balancer, further delivering on the benefits of software-defined storage and significantly reducing the overall cost of a petabyte-scale storage cloud. This is the last remaining SwiftStack 4.0 feature to be released. Stay tuned for additional info...

S3 Signature Version v4 Support

SwiftStack now fully supports AWS Signature Version 4 \(AWS4\) authentication algorithm as part of its S3 API support. While AWS2 will remain supported, many applications are shifting their support to AWS4. If your 3rd-party application uses the S3 API to interact with SwiftStack, it's highly recommended to update SwiftStack to the latest version.
